Israeli battery technology startup Addionics is opening a pilot manufacturing line for its Smart 3D Electrodes for electric vehicle batteries that improve energy density, power, safety and durability without increasing cost.

The ability to demonstrate a battery that not only charged quickly but would also be long-lived and would not explode under physical pressure, turned out to be a complex matter. The company had some successes in the lab, but the first generation germanium-based battery never reached the market and work on it was stopped.

Israel does not yet require sustainable disposal of these batteries, but with the increase in the number of electric vehicles on the road, electric car battery recycling has become a pressing issue. Batte-Re is the first Israeli company to recycle lithium batteries from cars and other electronics.
